CROMARTY - NIGG
CAR AND PASSENGER FERRY

Follow the old King's Route and take a trip on the ferry as you travel through the Black Isle and Easter Ross

CROMARTY

At the tip of the Black Isle lies one of Scotland's treasures, the town of Cromarty. Walk through its lanes and vennels and you can almost touch seven centuries of history.

When Cromarty's trade flourished at the end of the 18th century, large houses were built for successful merchants, side by side with the cottages of the fisher folk. This once busy port and commercial centre is now a uniquely preserved historic town.

CROMARTY FERRY

- Smallest car ferry in Britain
- Crosses an area rich in wildlife and world-famous for its dolphin population
- Known as the King's Ferry and used by at least two Kings - James IV and Robert the Bruce
- Part of the National and North Sea Cycle Routes
- Part of the Pictish Trail which links sites of archaeological interest dating back to before the ninth century A.D.

NIGG

Nigg, the site of the fabrication yard in which many of the oil rigs in the North Sea were constructed, lies on the north side of the ferry. It has one of the largest dry docks in Europe.

The ninth century Nigg cross-slab, housed in Nigg Old Church, is a major work of European art and is part of the Pictish Trail.
